Ride Listings

NYCC rides are intended to be friendly group rides; we don’t like to "drop" or lose anyone. Riders whose physical or bicycle condition seem inadequate for the ride are to be turned back by the leader. Our leaders are truly reluctant to do this, so please cooperate with them:

1) Select rides within your capabilities – avoid downgrading the ride for your fellow riders and stressing yourself trying to keep up or, conversely, demanding a faster pace than advertised.

2) Be on time or a bit early. Rides will leave promptly.

3) Have your bike in good condition: both brakes working, properly inflated tires, adjusted derailleurs, no loose parts.

4) Bring water, snacks, spare tube, patch kit, pump and lights for after dark.

5) Eat a good breakfast.

DOWNHILL, by Maxim Vickers

Somewhere above my head, the knife-edge of the coastal ridge is baking in the midday sun. Here, underneath, it is cool. The rapid tapping of water droplets falling from the roughly hewn, vaulted ceiling is periodically drowned in the amplified whizz-by of overtaking cars. Ahead, at the end of the mountain tunnel -- wide open sky.
Anticipation.
The grandeur of the unfolding scenery is enough to break the cadence. Luxuriously verdant foothills march down to the Pacific, melting into August haze. The Japan N42 folded majestically, sinuously, into the many valleys, lies exposed in its curvaceous descent, sinfully inviting.
Oh, baby, shall we dance!
Up into 90° and the air is humming. The first curve is still all acceleration.
Hands are firmly planted on the drops. The body shifts lightly into the turn.
Then we glide.
The straightway bends around the mountainside and for an instant the vista of the distant ocean reappears only to be replaced by another mountainside.
Air begins to rush.
The next curve receives us. It is comfy and exacting like a whirl on a parquet floor. My right buttck sinks into the left bump of the Avocet saddle as we lie down into its hurtling embrace.
The ocean reappears closer but briefer. Stark astonishment on the faces inside a Datsun, watching us go by on the shoulder. Fleeting recollection of the 50 km./hr.
speed limit...draw ahead of him...play the centerline -- need a generous turning radius at this velocity...keep her steady...atta boy!
The next embrace is even hotter. Oh, that banking is sheer heaven, the curvature is just right! Wow. Wow!!! Whopppeeeeee! Arf! Arf! Arf!
This is it. This is what we grind the uphills for -- the just reward for toil and sweat and gasping for air and the rubberized calf muscles and the dark in the eyes as the matter gives out while the mind goes on.
Halleluyah! Here comes another one: oh, Madonna! comm'e bella!
The thin line between living and the other thing is where the rubber meets asphalt at 90 psi and Lord knows how many RPM...the senses fuse together. No longer are there touch, sight, hearing. Everything merges into a single roaring, shaking, blurring exhilaration.
Feels sooo gooddd!
Still in the tuck as the roadway straightens, levels out. Then it is hemmed in by low, tightly spaced houses. Mopeds, small cars. Afternoon shoppers turn after the alien apparition astride a familiar machine. Odors of freshly broiled fish and seaweed emanate from the rickety sunshelters erected along the beach, broad at low tide, lapped by the Pacific. Angular kanji characters above a long, latinized subtitle.
Nagashima. Owasse -- 27 km.

CYCLING SHORTS --- by Gregory D'Agostino

Here is an entry for the "Hard Luck" file. According to SPORTS MEDICINE DIGEST, a publication that scans the world of medicine in search of new injuries, there is a big problem with lightweight bicycle seats. The thing is, the seats are typically long, pointed, and made with hard nylon. The DIGEST cites an article from the MEDICAL JOURNAL OF AUSTRALIA that says these saddles, if they become loosened on a ride across rough terrain, can rotate upward, literally impaling a rider. The exact nature of the injury I will leave to your imagination. The Australian journal suggests using nonslip clamps to keep the bike seat from rotating upward. We now know why Australia is referred to as "Down Under."

With Christmas and Hanukkah just around the corner, you may want to consult with the Club's resident model railroad expert, Herb Wasserman (859-0845), before buying your favorite niece/nephew that electric train set. Herb is a long time member of the Toy Train Operators Society and the Train Collectors Association and has written on the history of toy trains for the magazine, TRAIN COLLECTORS QUARTERLY.

Spring & fall are prime cycling seasons, but on most days it's too warm to wear a shirt & a wind jacket. But without that jacket --- especially at 15 mph, you end up cold. Bellwether & Plume have a stylish solution. Their partially shelled polypropylene cycling jackets cut the wind and have ventilation to keep you comfortable on the most challenging of days. Add a layer or two of polypropylene underwear, & they're just as practical for winter rides. Both Bellwether's Windfront & Plume's Touring Jacket have a wind resistant shell sewn to the front, the sleeves & across the shoulders. The Bellwether uses taffeta; the plume's shell is ripstop laminated Gore-Tex. The back of each jacket is left unshelled for ventilation. Rear pockets provide a place for your patch kit & a banana; front pockets let you warm your hands when you're off the bike. I give the Plume line the edge in versatility --- the Gore-Tex means it's more effective in the rain.

From the "Now-I've-Heard-Everything" file: an electronic musical bicycle horn. It sounds off with Yankee Doodle, Star Wars, Dixie, and 13 other "popular" pre-programmed electronic tunes by pushbutton control. This solid state horn & headlight mounts on any handlebars in under a minute. Be the first on your next club ride to have one of these marvels for free-wheeling fun!!

IRON LEG CHRONICLES: A Strong Rider's Effect on Cycling? by Jim Rex

I may not be everything that I would like to be any more than the New York Cycle Club should be, and surely I'm not alone in feeling that way either. Even so, I'm unable to take consolation from other people's mistakes, be it of a short- or a long-term nature.

To sketch some background, I would like to mention that once I was a beginner cyclist too, even though I had been around bicycles and other vehicles a lot. I was also a Junior Team Champion behind the Iron Curtain in the mid-50's before 10-speed bicycles made the scene. Along the way I have taken driving tests in Hungary for motorcycles, and France, West Germany and of course New York City for cars. All these unavoidably exposed me to a world-wide scale of bureaucratic ignorance of how existing and would-be authorities are trying to deal with cycling from the point of safety while they can't even manage to put a sewer grate on right. Lots of bullshit and very little action, if ever any.

It all boils down to keeping us on as short a leash as possible, if not off the road altogether. The AAA-produced film a few years ago comes close to that attempt by how they lead us to believe we should be able to survive menacing drivers. Their vision of it all is no better than if it was focused upon from the safe distance of a driver's seat with built-in blind spot limitations.

Since the horse and buggy days, when both bicycles and automobiles came into use, I find cars now of several horsepower capacity moving across midtown in rush-hour traffic no faster than a live horse or a bicycle, fouling up the air in the process. Their usefulness and growth potential leveled off by the time the first Edsel came off the production line. What we have traded in the process is one type of horseshit for another, and a whole culture built up around it.

By contrast, the cleaner, less dangerous, more energy efficiently designed bicycle, only grappling with a Cinderella complex yet, has a long way ahead of researching its full potential. We don't have to be radical about it -- time is on our side just as evolution is inevitable.

In the intervening period of bike boom-caused confusion, by the mid-70's we accumulated a surplus of would-be cycling high priests of various denominations who were trying to arrive at a consensus to serve cyclist interests as true faith that could be taught in schools to start off the next generation on the right path. Thus the creation of "Effective Cycling," endorsed by the League of American Wheelmen, began to gain momentum, clearing much of the fog, some of which is still around.

Of course, by then, Bill Hoffman had been Regional Vice President, and gutsy John Forester President of LAW. The impact was immediately felt nationwide, and some bureaucrats made themselves more than available, jumping on the bandwagon of a viable growing organization. LAW reciprocated by moving its headquarters closer to Washington, D.C., spelling out that their members were of better education and level of income than the National Average. It may have sounded like sweet music to some politicians, but the fact remains that the average New York City cyclist had not yet been able to make a similar impact on a local level. Hopefully our newly created Public Relations Director will be able to make a dent, even though lately we are getting nothing but bad rap from the media, creating a verve of hysteria in the club.

I would like to filter out some common denominators since I was brought into our club by former NYCC President Bob Herzfelder. Among other things, he had been as "A" a rider as Bill Hoffman. Bob was also a trumpet player and a Boy Scout Merit Badge Counsellor for Music. Wouldn't you know, I played trumpet in my school days for three years before giving it up for cycling, and have become a Scout Master plus Merit Badge Counsellor for Cycling. Also, notable Frank Berto of technical articles; Frank Peckham, trainer of the Long Island "Animals;" as well as John Forester, had been Scout Masters.

To give my scouts a chance at a uniform education of riding, I took Bill Hoffman's course on Effective Cycling in 1980 when I was already known to be an accomplished rider. See, I had nothing to lose -- at least I can endorse it. I left nothing to chance taking 70-90 lb. kids on 50-mile trips whose equipment must feel like a ton by comparison. Two of them made it in four hours, another did 100 km. under seven hours on the first try.

In the CRCA-assisted annual Astoria Park Race, four of them placed in the top ten positions within a year in a single attempt. Obviously I'm proud of them and would not regard them as offensive bikers by any means. I think I have been a good influence on them.

So what's supposed to be my gripe, you wonder?

It's Bill Hoffman's inadvertently shoddy salespitch/Effective Cycling course offer on page 6 of the November 1983 bulletin, by using bad advertising technique to sell a good product. First he points out what you may lose by not taking it, with a list of cycling hazards riders have to cope with, which is all true. Then the plot gets thicker.

He quotes Irv Weisman's concern over "flagrant disregard of the law, or even incon siderate riding styles," then, using that platform with a considerably convenient oversight, makes negative references ONLY to so-called "strong riders" and of course "animals." That's when I hit the ceiling...

Being a strong rider is no moral deficiency even if implied by a holier-than-thou sanctimonious attitude which stems from a popularly mistaken notion that strong backs are the result of weak minds. I, for one, don't feel the need to be rescued by people whose purpose includes treating me so stupidly as if I was one. This psychology works only as barrier removers to brain washing, not education. Some people fall for it sometimes but I passed that stage long ago. In fact I regard those offenders as renegades who escaped the clutches of Irv and Bill in their "C" and "B" rider development phase as failures of that system. This is about as offensive as throwing garbage on someone else's front lawn for no reason at all. Sure, we have to do more pruning, but we are not planting any bad seed either.

Bad riding habits of these few people who can't even keep up with us to see what we are supposed to be doing wrong does not make them one of us, thereby could not serve anybody's purpose by any stretch of the imagination.

Strong riders in general are busy training, trying to be fit to reach for their personal best, have very little time to waste or cater to idiots, let alone be assimilated by them. Strong riders are no more to be blamed for bad riding habits than anybody else.

Trying to touch on all aspects of this problem could turn out to be as numerous as bunion on a centipede, and of no more significance.

In the final analysis, I want to thank Bill for giving me the opportunity to get something off my chest that had been one of my sore spots for years. MIT graduate Steve Bauman told me years ago: "Give people the chance and they screw up anything." I think this explains somewhat the dilemma we are faced with.

I try to be as broad-minded as I can. But sometimes I like to dispel some mistaken popular notions. I'm still working on women's equal rights -- for the silent majority of brunettes and minority of redheads to get their share of fun that blondes claim to have more of. Of course, responsible blondes with contrasting views can reach me for equal time responses after 9 p.m. also.
1. The Board approved the following resolutions:
   a. That, henceforth, each candidate in a contested race for office in the NYCC is hereby given authorization to publish a statement of not more than 75 words in the November bulletin and that this fact will be announced at the September general membership meeting when nominations are taken.
   b. That five patch designs, selected by the Board at this meeting, are to be presented to the November general membership meeting for reaction by the membership.

2. The next meeting of the Board will be held December 6.
